I approach web design as an artform, and webdesign as a portrait of your business. I am a person, not a company.

Way back in 1983-85, I was staff writer for Computer People Monthly, (People and their Logic Machines) a little free newspaper ahead of it's time.

We used the first desktop publishing software invented. It could only pour text into columns and justify it (after hand coding much like html.) It was a miracle, and a blessing. I fell in love with computers as a communication tool then and there!

Computers have become more powerful and sophisticated, and are once again my full-time obsession. I am eager to share my knowledge and experience.
